Employment Law WEBINAR: Reducing Lawsuit Risks of Terminations and Staff Reductions

Todd Fredrickson, top Denver employment attorney

The EEOC's 2008 report shows a 15.2% increase over 2007 in charges against private employers, and the highest numbers to date. In times of high unemployment, charges of discrimination tend to rise.

Many dealerships have been forced to downsize operations and/or may be contemplating further reductions. This session will show how to minimize the risk of claims and lawsuits stemming from terminations and reductions in force ("RIFs") along with practical guidance to end employment relationships as amicably as possible. Highlights include:

- Avoidance of discrimination claims, layoff notification laws, laws covering severance agreements and when to use them, and various end-of-employment issues such as final pay, COBRA, and unemployment compensation.
 - Including the implications of recent and significant changes to the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA) and the Family Medical Leave Act (FMLA)
- Retaining essential talent as part of the RIF analysis, supporting those employees who are in transition, and effectively communicating with employees regarding terminations and workforce reductions
- Checklists and plans to conduct proper and defensible terminations and RIFs
